Insects AND YOUR HEALTH

NO SEASON

Pest control protection knows no season! Your home should be fully protected 12 months a year . . . even during the most severe winter. It is true that the insect problem is worse during the warmer months of the year if no protection has been provided in your home during the cold months . . .but, even when you do not see Mr. Mosquitoe or Mr. Roach, he is usually doing quite well for himself . . . living in the comfort of your home . . . the comfort you have provided for the members of your family.

NO REASON

There is no reason to let the pest control problem slip up on you. Every home owner is well aware of the obnoxious pests that pose a hazard to health and happiness. It is also pretty well known that something more than housekeeping cleanliness is necessary to maintain efficient control. There is no reason for the problem . . . no reason for the fuss and muss that is a part of the do-it-yourself methods. And . . . you seldom save a dime by these self administered tactics.

JUST CALL DODSON

The simplest . . . the safest . . . the very best thing you can do to keep your home or business free of pests is to call DODSON BROTHERS PEST CONTROL, Lynchburg, Virginia, and let us come to your home or business . . . analyse your problem . . . and then prescribe the proper treatment. Our phone number is 846-2747. Call us collect anytime. We'll be happy to quote prices . . . prices so low you'll never want to tackle the tick again. One Hundred Clay Pipes Sold rs. Bess Mattox reports the e of 100 clay pipes, made in ublin at the old Pipe Factory s a result of the follow letter:

r Mrs. Mattox:
etime ago, Mr. Jack Walker he National Park Service office in Washington told me of knowledge of a collection issed red clay Pamplin pipes from the 19th Century and ed by Miss Wilsie Thornton. lieve Mr. Walker had talked you about these pipes while was doing research on them your city in 1962.

National Park Service is ently engaged in an extenprogram of restoring and ishing eleven historic build at Fort Laramie National perhaps know, Fort Laramie the most important post on the emigrant routes to California and Oregon during the 19th Century and also played an important role in the Indian Wars that resulted from the settlement of the West.

Archeological work conducted as a part of our research for the restoration of Fort Laramie has produced the recovery of a number of fragments of the Pamplin pipes, indicating that these were probably sold at the Post Sutler's Store and were favored by Army personnel stationed at Fort Laramie. As a result, we are most anxious to obtain some of them to use in the refurnishings of the historic buildings.

I am writing to you at the suggestion of Mr. Walker to inquire if you think it would be possible to arrange the purchase of pipes from Miss Thornton. I do not know the size of her collection, its variety, nor the individual value of the pipes, and would welcome hearing from you regarding these matters.

We would be most grateful for any advice and assistance you can give us.

Sincerely,
Nan V. Carson (Mrs.)

Why We Work

Lesson for March 7, 1965

Some of the parables of Jesus sound crazy. Let's face it: the "plain and simple" teachings of Jesus are often neither clear nor simple. Reader and listener have to wrestle as best they can to find what Jesus really meant. One thing the Christian reader is sure of: These parables are not crazy. The Lord meant something true in each one.

One story is particularly strange. It is about a grape-grower at harvest time who hired workmen in the morning for a denarius a day. (An average daily wage in New Testament times. The "denarius" was a small silver coin.) At intervals through the day he hired more men, telling them he would pay what was right. Finally an hour before quitting time he hired some more without promising them anything at all. Then, at the end of the long twelve-hour day, he paid off, giving each man the same amount, whether he had worked one hour or twelve.

Working for the Paycheck

This parable is not intended to teach us what a day's wages should be in our day and time. It is not intended to tell employers what kind of wage scale is the right one. What would become of a farmer who regularly hired workmen as the man in the parable did?) The point is in the different motives men have for working. A second point is indeed a point of double one. It makes us think of the different motives men have for working.

Now some people work for God with purpose. They keep his commandments, they do kind deeds, they help worthy causes, only because they hope there's a book-keeping angel who will see to it that they get credit for every good thing they do. Now it is not wrong to work for a paycheck, even God's. What is wrong is having this as one's only and sufficient reason for working at all.

Easy Money

On the bottom rung of the stairway to heaven, below those who work only for pay (here or in heaven) stand those who hope the stairway is an escalator that will take them to the top floor without their having to climb. In terms of reward, these are the people who live for easy money. They are the rice-Christians. They are the ones who, not content with getting credit for every single good deed they do, want credit for what they don't do.

Working in Faith

The last men hired that day had no promises at all. No denarius, not even "what is right." The only motive they could have had was confidence in the man who hired them. They trusted him, and when he ordered them into the vineyard, they went, not expecting much. Now the point of the story (as we said) is a double one. Here Jesus is telling us that what a man is worth in his visible accomplishments. Motive is a very important part of any action. If human beings could see clear into the hearts of men as God can, they might arrange their payrolls different-ly. But in real life there is no computer yet made which will calculate what percentage of credit for a good deed is due to motive. No man can guess it precisely. But there is a final Judge, supreme and infallible. It is God who sees the heart. All that our neighbors guess at but never see is clear to God. Only God pays off in the end. And before his judgment throne the greatest rewards may come to those who expect them least.
